About this training: This training is for small businesses who process and package acid, acidified, or exempt ‘canned’ food products such as jams and jellies, salsas and pickles, and sauces or spreads. Operators processing acid or exempt foods should complete this training to meet FDA requirements under the Food Safety Modernization Act (21 CFR 117.4). This course also meets the training requirement for manufacturers of acidified foods (pickles and salsa) under 21 CFR 114. There are 4 open-book exams during the training.

Who should attend: Key personnel from small businesses manufacturing jams and jellies, sauces, dressings, spreads and pickled products should attend. The training covers the science and technology behind safe manufacture of canned foods. The training will guide processors through the development and approval of a recipe. Good Manufacturing Practices will be discussed. While focused on meeting Wisconsin and FDA requirements, small business operators from other states are welcome to attend.

Additional information: Small business operators who successfully complete this training will have access to free, follow-up Process Authority and business development support.
